In the Market For a WHEAT DRILL

Then Our "New Peoria" Is What You Want

It has perfect working discs, fitted with dust proof chilled bearings, single draw bars that will not gather trash, staggered spoke wheels with 7-inch hub and 3-inch tires, continuous rear bar with truss rod to support seat and keep drill from sagging, direct pressure in rear of disc; a feature we claim will make this drill work perfectly in any land suitable for sowing grain and where other drills cannot be operated. A seat in center of drill convenient to lever is also furnished. Drop in and let us show you what this drill can do, and furnish you with the names of a score of satisfied users. One feature of our drill that puts it in a class by itself and makes it superior to all other drills on the market is the "Peoria Disc Shoe." You won't find the disc shoe on any other press drill on earth, the Peoria people have that feature cinched and they are going to hang on to it. If you want to know why we can grow more wheat to the acre after this drill than any other with the same amount of grain sown, come in and let us explain to you the "New Peoria Disc Shoe Drill."

LOVELY MEETING

Woman's Club Reception to Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Smith a Beautiful Affair.

Occasion a Worthy Tribute to a Brilliant Woman

The Public Library last evening was the scene of a delightful reception and social function given by the Mason County Woman's Club in honor of Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Smith, the handsome and talented President of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Smith was the guest of Mrs. Stanley Forman Reed, President of the local Woman's Club, while in Maysville.

This distinguished lady is a niece of Governor McCreary and is now the quasimistress of the executive mansion at Frankfort, his excellency being a widower; therefore Mrs. Smith is "the first woman in Kentucky," and right well does she deserve that honor both in looks and intellect.

Last night before a brilliant assemblage of over a hundred members of the Mason County Woman's Clubs, Mrs. Smith made her initial appearance here as the titular head of the State organization of women and she was most cordially greeted and welcomed to Mason county and to Maysville. She was introduced by Mrs. Reed in a few appropriate remarks and she then addressed her most appreciative audience, her subject being: "The Purpose and Plan of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs."

Mrs. Smith is a pleasing speaker, charmingly at ease and overflowing with native wit and simplicity of style, which captured her hearers. She speaks for the entire womanhood of Kentucky, and in unfolding the plan and purpose of the woman's organization, her principal and leading thought is the elevation of woman, the child and the home. It is good to see such intelligent effort made in our state for the emancipation of women from the horrors of drudgery, ignorance and monotony, which has and is wearing away the lives of hundreds of millions of the female sex.

The women of Kentucky must be taught the right way to live to bring them all the higher and easier enjoyments which are theirs by the grace of God, and assistance of man and helping voice and hand of the women who already know how to live.

Mrs. Smith's talk was a gem of good and clustering points as those who were there and gave careful attention to her remarks will fully agree.

Miss Jessie O. Yancey then spoke briefly of the grand work being done in Kentucky for the conservation of children's eyesight.

The event was a most happy one from every viewpoint.

Miss Lida Berry, pianist, Miss Amy King, vocalist, and Mr. Robert Straus, violinist, charmed all with their exquisite renditions.

Following the reception to Mrs. Smith at the close of the gathering, very delicious refreshments were served by Traxel.

Mr. Louis Hotze, one of our good citizens, is quite sick at his home above town.

DR. TRACY'S LECTURE

Fine Audience Out Last Evening to Hear Illustrated Temperance Talk

Dr. Tracy's illustrated temperance lecture last night at the Third Street M. E. Church drew a fair sized audience notwithstanding the many other attractions in the city.

The speaker called upon the clergy of of Maysville to assist him in stirring up a moral awakening, which he declares Maysville needs at present.

The Doctor's lecture was high-class, while the temperance object lessons thrown on the cannvas were vivid and soul stirring.

NEED GLOVES NOW

Success of Finger-Print System Hard on Crooks.

Has Been Means of Securing Many Convictions and Its Use Is Being Adopted More Widely by the Police.

Indianapolis.—Burglars operating in Indianapolis in the future will have to wear gloves, as the detective department henceforth will pay more attention to the practical side of the finger-print system. Captain of Detectives Holtz, on a recent visit to New York, found the detectives there were making use of the finger-print system, and he believes it will be a great help in solving burglaries.

The detective department here has used the finger-print system since it was adopted by the national bureau of identification. It has been used, however, more in identifying prisoners with the Bertillon system. After a prisoner has been brought in and his Bertillon identification has been completed, the finger-print cards were used to verify the identification more completely.

"When I was in New York recently I found the police department using the finger-print system to identify burglars who leave finger prints around the 'job' they have done," said Captain Holtz. "Several large burglaries have been cleared in the east through finger prints, and the detectives there say burglars now wear gloves when they are at work."

"I have always believed the finger prints practical in police work. Frequently the finger prints of safe blowers are left on the door, and the ordinary burglar is apt to leave finger prints around a door or window."

"The trouble is, the finger print to be of any service to police work, has to be very clear, or the expert is unable to see enough lines to make an identification."

Bert Perrott, Bertillon clerk, is also the finger-print expert. Perrott, since he has taken up the finger prints in connection with the Bertillon work, has shown great skill. Recently, as a test, a glass bottle was taken into the detective department at roll call. Previously the detectives had gone to Perrott's office and he took the impression of their finger tips.

After leaving the bottle Perrott returned to his office. Detective Frank Duncan picked up the bottle and carried it to the other side of the room. Perrott then took the bottle to his office and compared the finger prints with those he had taken of the various detectives. He picked out Duncan as the man who had handled the bottle.

The advantage of the finger prints of the burglar to the detective is if the burglar has ever been under arrest of a larceny charge a record of his finger prints has been taken. The expert goes to the scene of the burglary, takes an impression of the finger prints, and then compares it with the cards he has on file.

CRUEL JOKE SHOCKS WOMAN

Post Card Received From Unknown Writer Informs Her of Husband's Death.

Newark, N. J.—Mrs. Joseph Collins of 37 Cleveland avenue, Harrison, received a postal card stating that her husband had died in the tuberculosis hospital in Laurel Hill, Secaucus, and that unless his body was claimed at once it would be buried there. Collins is an inmate of the institution.

FIND FAMED WARRIOR'S BODY

Workmen Discover Tomb of Andrea Morosini in Venetian Church—Mummy Also Found.

Venice.—It always pays to scrape the walls of the churches and palaces of Italy, for almost invariably under the uninteresting outer wash are found frescoes of more or less value. This is just what happened here in the Church of St. John and Paul, where some frescoed figures of the evangelists have come to light near the high altar.

What is, perhaps, more interesting to the ordinary traveler is the discovery in the same church at the other side of the high altar of a Gothic sarcophagus of the fourteenth century in which a mummified body was lying on the back with the head turned to the right. One of the feet was detached from the body. From the description it was learned that these were the remains of Andrea Morosini, a famous warrior and a member of the family which gave four doges to Venice. The remains have been left and the last his wife heard from him he was improving rapidly. Mrs. Collins became hysterical and neighbors who heard her cries went to console her. It was noticed by one of them that the card was unsigned and that the postmark showed it had been mailed in Harrison instead of Secaucus.

When neighbors were consoling Mrs. Collins, another took the card to the police station, and the sergeant on duty telephoned to the hospital inquiring as to Collins' condition. Word came back that he was out for a walk. The police will try to learn who played the alleged "practical joke" on Mrs. Collins.

Footpads' Novel Methods.

Warsaw.—Footpads who infest the suburbs of this town have hit on a novel way of robbing peasants' carts as they drive in laden with provisions.

The peasant drives while his wife sits at the back of the cart to keep guard. The thieves jump onto the cart, put their arms round the woman's waist, kiss her and hustle her off with exclaiming terms. Off runs the outraged husband to catch his wife. Meanwhile the Don Juan's accomplices take away the provisions and disappear into the forest.

When the peasant finally gets back his wife finds he has been robbed of all but the cart. The trick is practiced with great success.

Intact and the tomb will be exhibited to the public as soon as the restoration of the church is completed.

MAN 70 YEARS YOUNG SKATES

Gay Old Boy Just Whirls Around to Get an Appetite—Gets It, Too.

Tacoma.—Clerks and others arriving late at their offices have recently been giving an excuse that they have been watching an old man skate.

As they reach a certain street they hear the whirl of rollers on the asphalt paving. Rounding a corner, they see a little old man, with long chin whiskers, sunken eyesockets, but very bright eyes, speeding along at a reckless rate. His ball-bearing rollers he manipulates with the dexterity of a fourteen-year-old veteran.

A reporter approached the septuagenarian skater and was received with suspicion.

"Don't get it into your head that I'm doing this to revive ice-skating," he said. "This is a very healthy way of spending spare time. I get out here in the early morning and whirl around and have the finest appetite for breakfast you ever saw. And I'm nearly seventy."

"I used to skate a lot in Holland. The doctor says it's a great thing for me, and I know it is, so that's all there is to it."

BETTER EYES, BETTER MAN

California Prison Warden Has a Theory Along the Lines of Reform.

Sacramento, Cal.—To carry out his theory that steps for all-around betterment of prisoners should be taken, beginning with physical conditions, Warden Johnston of Folsom penitentiary has had thirty-two prisoners examined by eye and ear specialists.

Jake Oppenheimer, "the Hyena," under sentence of death, will be fitted with a pair of glasses. The warden said that Oppenheimer was pleased with the result, as his vision had been much impaired in the preparation of a book he is now writing, entitled "The Thoughts of a Condemned Man."

Another prisoner will be fitted with an artificial eye, on the theory that any improvement in a prisoner's looks will brighten his self-respect and make him more amenable to efforts for his reform.

GOTHAM CHURCHES EMPTY

Religious Workers Say Church Interest Has Never Been So Slight as This Summer.

New York.—According to New York religious publications, the complaint is general among Christian workers in New York that never within recollection has the interest in church matters been so slight or the attendance so all

The churches on Fifth and Madison avenues and Trinity on Broadway, which usually have their congregations swelled in the summer by visitors from out of town, are suffering from the apathy as much as their smaller neighbors. There were only twenty-six persons at one of the wealthiest and most aristocratic of the churches one Sunday morning last week.

EUROPEAN TRIP A RELIEF FROM CARE

For years the Browns had planned a European trip, but every year something happened to prevent their getting away. First the children were ill and then Mrs. Brown invited guests for a short time, who stayed several months, preventing the Browns, by the dwindling of the bank account, from going abroad that year. Thus things went on.

Finally Brown declared as an absolute certainty that Europe would see them the following year. All their friends were notified and everything was done to make it impossible for their trip to be prevented.

When all was ready, however, Brown was ordered by his firm to secure a particularly desirable contract at any cost. It meant a lot to the firm and to Brown, but it also meant months of untiring effort—effort that could not be put forth in Europe.

Brown, however, had made his vow and he refused to let his business interfere with his family's plans. The family could go to Europe even if he couldn't. They had relatives abroad, and, besides, he could send them with a party. So he packed them on the train and looked as cheerful as possible when he pulled out.

When he returned home, however, he began to realize how lonesome it was there. It got on his nerves finally and he resolved to board during his bachelorhood. So he moved to a hotel.

Then the thought came to him to rent his house for the months that it would be vacant unless he rented it. There was no earthly use in letting it stand and gather dust, which was the same as throwing away a goodly sum of money each month. Some one would be only too glad of the opportunity to live in a well furnished house in a fashionable suburb, with all the benefits of the Browns' home comforts. Some one, no doubt, was searching eagerly for such an opportunity. So Brown hastened to advertise the treat in store for some one.

The number of replies he received was highly gratifying to him. After picking out the letter written on the best appearing stationery he clinched the bargain over the telephone. Of course, the tenants refused to pay nearly what he thought his house was worth, but on reflection he concluded that they were really caretakers for him who would look after his property generally. He even began to feel under obligations to them for their willingness to take his house and he urged them to make themselves perfectly at home, assuring them that everything in the house was theirs to use as they desired.

When he hung up the receiver he heaved a sigh of relief and content. He hadn't even think of the house again until his family were about to return. It was really a great idea of his to have some one take care of the property for him; now he could devote his entire time to the task of getting that important contract.

It was about a week later that over the telephone he listened to a very indignant feminine voice commanding his immediate presence at his home. Fearing no less calamity than a fire, Brown hastened to catch the first train to the familiar suburb.

"What's the matter?" he asked of the woman who opened the door after he had established his identity.

"Why," she replied, without inviting him in, "I wanted to ask you where I can find the potato knife and the carving set. And when you rented us this place you gave us to understand that it was completely furnished! Well, ever since we moved in we've been unable to find things we ought to have! There are no oyster forks nor individual butter knives! And the table linen is a disgrace—we could never invite guests to dine with us with such linen!"

"And the water froze the first night we were here, so we had to have a plumber, and that was $7. He says your drains are in a terribly insanitary condition, and if we get typhoid we shall certainly charge our doctor bills to you! You've no business advertising a perfect home—it's getting money under false pretenses!"

"We've had to buy lots of little things. Your brooms are dreadful, and some of your kitchen utensils were absolutely worn out. We'll just take the cost out of the rent—for, of course, the things will belong to the house."

Brown had ceased to listen. He was contemplating the gown worn by his tenant—a dainty house dress of Mrs. Brown's. His wife had left much of her wardrobe at home, he knew. In the doorway, to receive the first footprints of the incomers, was the Browns' most valuable rug, treasured as very gold! He wondered what might lie beyond his vision!

He stuttered helplessly, trying to express his dissatisfaction, but the glare of righteous indignation in his tenant's eyes rendered him inarticulate.

"All the rent for the first month is already paid out," said the woman. "When the plumber's bill comes in shall we send it to you, or shall we pay it out of next month's rent?"

"There there won't be another month!" exploded Brown, turning on his heel to prevent himself from making further unseemly remarks. But as he stumbled along the street he recalled that the objectionable occupants of his home had a lease to fortify them against his wrath.—Chicago Daily News.

Remarkable Operation.

A most remarkable surgical case is the almost complete recovery of Mrs. Mary Marions of Orange, N. J., whose back was broken more than two months ago in a fall down a flight of stairs. The unusual operation was performed of reinforcing the fractured vertebrae with fine wire.

IDEAS FOR HOME BUILDERS BY WM. A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

A simple shack, with little adornment inside or outside, if it is owned by the man it shelters, is infinitely preferable to a "second-hand" rented house owned by and exacting tribute for someone else. This is old-fashioned sentiment, and many who preach it live themselves in rented cages; but it is gospel truth, just the same; and every day there are more and more people who are coming to realize it, and who are working and saving and planning for the day when at last they can take a long breath of restful contentment "under their own vine and fig tree."

How much better to build a house like this for $1,000 or $1,200 than to keep on paying out good money for rent receipts. The reason why clerks and office men keep on paying rent year after year, ranging from $20 to $30 per month in the smaller cities, up to $40 or even $60 in the larger ones, is simply on account of pride—false pride. They cannot afford a large, luxurious house, and they are ashamed to live in a small, cheap one.

There are many four-room flats in the city of Chicago containing less space than this little bungalow, which rent for $30, and some as high as $40 per month. One side of such a flat is sure to be dark; and generally light only comes from the street in front and the alley in the rear. At the right and at the left are solid, smoky, dingy brick walls; and the inmates are obliged to burn gas in the middle rooms in the daytime if they have a home; but how much it would be if they could get ideas down to something with husband's reach, then take him and beautify the ground house until the little cottage; most attractive spot on earth themselves, and to their children they have any. It costs an go back and forth morning and but every town and city is with street-car transportation, cost of fare is a small item weighed up against the saving ing expenses, and especially in There is, however, another con tion which weighs more than m It is the home feeling, the loving timent that grows up around the p erty which you have bought and t for by degrees, that is of more v than money.

It would be difficult to build a kind of house cheaper than this little bungalow affair; still the appearance is pleasing. The large parlor window with two side lights, and the dining room bay with such a neat tie slide porch tucked away in the corner, just add the finishing touches that are so suggestive of refinement and good taste. Looks about for a good deal in a house, and more in a cottage. The pleasing appearance of most country cottages where a good garden is kept, comes more from the care bestowed on the grounds than from the style or beauty of the house itself; but it is better study appearances even in building very small house.

NOT AN INHERITED DISEASE

Tubercular Germs Acquired Only Through Association With Those Who Are Afflicted.

Very fat people and very thin people are more likely to have it.

want to see. Still the poor, deluded mortals who occupy such places refuse to go out into the suburbs, where the sun shines and where abundance of fresh air may be had for nothing. The hospitals are populated from these little sunless flats; but the people who hibernate in such places have grown accustomed to their disagreeable surroundings, and you know you can learn to tolerate almost any kind of existence.

The design here illustrated is a little four-room cottage house that may be easily and cheaply furnished, and heated all winter with four or five tons of coal. The same furniture that is necessary to furnish a flat will fit in this house. The only extra is a coal range for cooking, unless the house is built within piping distance of a gas main. Unless the heat from the cooking range is necessary to warm the house, probably gas is as cheap as coal for cooking purposes; much depends on management.

I should certainly advise a young man who has a good position and not much money, to build a house like this, and not go too deeply in debt. Later, if he wants to put a cellar under it, it can be easily done; and, while making alterations, it is easy to put a small furnace in the cellar and add a bathroom or any other improvement desired.

The point I wish to make is that a man is very foolish to keep on living in rented quarters instead of making a start on a home of his own. It is not a question of finances. Any man in possession of good health and a determination to own a little house like this, can do so; but he will never do it by waiting until he has money enough to build the kind of a house that his most expensive friends occupy. At least, not one man in a hundred thousand ever succeeds very well on that plan.

I am perfectly aware of the fact that the women folks have as much as or more to say about the house than the men have, and they are after to blame because they do not sumption than people of good average weight. If your brothers or sisters have consumption, your chances are against escaping it. If your father lingered along with consumption, or your mother died of consumption, there is danger that you may get consumption. But if your father and mother both died of consumption when you were very young, you have a good chance of not getting the disease.

The reason for all this is that people do not inherit consumption, but acquire the tubercular germs from association with people who have consumption. That is the reason why one sick brother or sister in the house are likely to convey the disease to you. It is the reason why one of your parents, lingering along through many years of the disease, is likely to spread it to other members of the family—but if this parent or both parents die of consumption while you are very young you may have been spared the long years of possible infection.

The more the scientists study the subject of tuberculosis the more they are convinced that it is a disease of poor food and poor nourishment. It has been repeatedly asserted that there is no excuse for a rich man having consumption in his family. The cure for this disease is plenty of good food rather than fresh air.—New York American.

Tuberculosis Day, Oct. 27.

Every one of the 600 and more anti-tuberculosis associations allied with the National Association will be urged to promote Tuberculosis Day on October 27th in the churches of their respective communities. While last year over 50,000 churches observed this occasion, it is expected this year that this number will be doubled. Millions of circulars and other forms of literature will be distributed. The support of every religious denomination will be asked for. That tuberculosis is a serious problem among church congregations is evidenced by statistics which the National Association gathered last year, which show that 10 per cent of all deaths among church members are caused by tuberculosis. Based on these figures and on the mortality statistics of the Census Bureau, over 62,000 of the 33,000,000 communicants in churches in the United States die from tuberculosis every year. This figure assumes that the death rate of 160 per 1,000 population in the registration area applies to all churchgoers, when, as a matter of fact, the rate would be higher.

"How about that sleeping car berth I telephoned for?" "I have no record of it," replied the man at the window, wearily. "But I told you to make a reservation." "Then we did so, of course. But it was probably only a mental reservation."

The Democrats of Congress made rainbow promises of economy before Congress met. After the pork barrel had been around, Uncle Sam found his grocery bill was just as high as ever.—Fleming Gazette.

Running a finger down the list of newspapers which are supporting Roosevelt—it don't take long—it may be noted that almost without exception they are owned by Democrats or men in unlawful "Big Business" of the sort Taft is bringing under the law.

JOHNSON'S FLING AT TAFT.

When Gov. Hiram Johnson said to his Taft-hating hearers at Columbus the other day. "It is with shame as an American citizen that I say that today the most humiliating character in all American history is the president of the United States," he was cheered to the echo.

But that declaration was read with disgust by many Americans who are not supporters of President Taft for the presidency.

The New York Evening Post, for instance, a Wilson organ, after quoting Johnson's bitter words and remarking that their author had said what tended to degrade the presidency, our most exalted office, "in the eyes of the nation and the world," declares as follows:

Gov. Johnson will find this a sadly unregenerate part of the country, for he will be surprised to learn that there are hundreds of thousands of people who will, irrespective of party and their personal opinions of Mr. Taft's success or non-success in the White House, follow Gov. Johnson's own example of rank speech and say that his utterance is that of a man destitute of the attributes of a gentleman. If that is the best of the West, they will cry out, "Let us have converse only with the East."

So much for a typical eastern view of the third-termers' vice-presidential candidate. Now let us turn to what a California newspaper, the San Francisco Call, has to say of him:

The Call is disappointed in Governor Johnson. He promised to give the state a good economical administration, and he promised to add to the state's business himself, faithfully and constantly. He has not done it.

The state's expense account is higher than ever. The governor is almost constantly absent from his office. He deputizes Al. McCabe and John F. Neylan, two small politicians, to attend to the state's business. He has been absent eight months out of the last ten. He is about to go away for two months more to campaign for another office. The Call insists that he has no right so to neglect his official duties, and the taxpayers are saying the same thing. If he can't attend to his official duties, he should resign.

Some day it will be known why Johnson puts so much venom in the references he makes to President Taft. The animus he exhibits is not becoming in the governor of a great state and an aspirant to the office of vice president.

Think of a Bull Moose wearing suspenders?

Roosevelt will doubtless be surprised also to learn that David anticipated him in the conclusion that "all men are liars."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, addressing the National Dental Association in Washington, declared that more children die because of bad teeth than from any other trouble.

In one of his books Woodrow Wilson describes Thomas Jefferson as "an aristocrat who deliberately practiced the arts of a politician. Washington found him a guide that needed watching."

What do Jeffersonian Democrats think of that?

Everything is politics any more. You can hold a picnic, a Sunday School convention, a grange meeting or bean dinner but what some wily politician gets after the committee in charge and sees that a candidate or prospective candidate of his liking gets on the program for a speech. It has played havoc with the Sunday School meetings. It used to be that people generally would attend them. But any more the principal orators are cheap politicians who probably never see the inside of a Sunday School room except when the campaign is on. These meetings should be announced by their right names. It should be stated in advance that a political pow-wow will be held in Smith's grove for the benefit of Bill Jones, candidate for Infirmary director. Then the people would know what to expect and could go or stay at home just as they chose. If it is just a common picnic, they want to go and have a good time and not be bored to death by a long-winded, sleeve-loaded politician. Of course they are cheap. The committee is not out anything financially for they pay their own expenses and naturally spread political germs by kissing all the babies in the grove.—Jackson Sun.

WOULD BE BIG A NOISE.

If it should turn out, as George Harvey fears, and the House of Representatives should have to elect a President of the United States, what hall is there in Washington big enough to accommodate the Colonel and his red bandanna army while they are at the capital bulldozing the electors?—Philadelphia Ledger.

Democrat Warns Democrats

Carlisle Mercury, Democratic.

The Democratic vote in Vermont shows a gain of something like 3,000 over the highest vote ever before cast for a Democratic candidate for the governorship. That one fact will have to be disposed of before there is room for consolation for either the Taft or the Roosevelt followers at the result.

Every Democrat in Nicholas county should know that the election for President is held in November and not in September, and that ballots and not bragging count, and it takes money to get out the ballot makers. Kentucky is all right but there are states where work—and hard work will have to be done.

At the election held in Maine last Monday the Republicans elected a full state ticket including the Legislature. The Republicans gain a Congressman. The Democrats will doubtless quit bragging and go to work now. The Democratic leader who tells the people that "it's all over but the shouting" is a fraud. Old High Protective Tariff is wonderfully alive.

SHELL GOES LONG DISTANCE

Interesting History of 12-inch Projectile Used in Spanish War—Traveled Four Miles.

Screaming out its defiant message of possible death and disaster, a 12-inch 1,000-pound shell was sent across the Bay of Santiago on the fateful morning of July 3, 1898, from one of the battleships—Texas, Iowa or Indiana. The shell traveled a distance of between three and four miles and found lodgment in the side of a rocky hill just behind Morro castle, the charge being unexploded. It now reposes peacefully on the sidewalk in front of a store in Carson street, Southside, near Twenty-seventh street, but minus the charge.

Thousands of people pass the spot daily, but little or no heed is given by them to this interesting relic of Uncle Sam's encounter with the one-time great power of Spain.

The shell was shipped on October 20, 1899, by Capt. Surgeon James McKay, United States navy, to his father, Stephen McKay, of this city, and is much prized by the latter as a relic and souvenir.

Capt. McKay gave an interesting description of the circumstances attending the firing and finding of the shell. He states: "The shell was fired from the Indiana or Texas from a distance of between three or four miles, and it was doubtless fired at the eastern battery, a concealed battery of several old bronze cannon situated in a hollow in the bluff, and only visible from several miles at sea. Our ships paid great attention to this particular battery from noticing that, while the muzzles of the cannon were visible over the embankment before firing, they disappeared simultaneously with that operation. Now from the excellent habit drilled into the men of the navy of overestimating rather than doubting the strength of the enemy, they decided the battery must be composed of modern rifled disappearing guns, and acted accordingly. Every now and again, and when the ships seemed most quiet, one or another would drop a carefully calculated shell in such close proximity as to keep the artillerymen working the guns in a state of constant terror. This shell, from its position, must have flown over the guns and men at just sufficient height to clear the ridge and plunge into the hill beyond. It missed its mark by a very small margin. However, the hundreds of holes, some large enough to form a cellar for a large dwelling, scattered all about and within the battery, the dismounted, crippled and half-buried pieces, and the general wreck made of nature in the entire vicinity, speak only too eloquently of the excellent marksmanship of our gunners, and the splendid conduct of our ships in general.

"When Admiral Sampson visited the above-mentioned battery some months after the surrender, he smilingly told how they had been fooled by the strange disappearing qualities of the old guns. Many of these old pieces dated back to 1718 and were masses of most wonderful and beautiful hand carving, but the gun carriages were not more than 100 years old, hence the parts did not fit and the recoil mechanism (great buffer springs) being useless the piece on being discharged would bound back into the air the full length of the carriage (15 feet). The muzzles were visible over the cement before firing, but their rebound flight carried them far out of sight, hence the disappearing guns which deceived our men for a while."

The shell, singular to relate, shows but slight marks of its impact with its rocky billet, another proof of the care with which American projectiles are fashioned.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Where the Gray Hairs Came From.
The attitude of the commanding generals of the north and south toward each other, after the final surrender, writes Mr. Thomas Nelson Page in his recent book on General Lee, is one that the world regarded with astonishment, and that Americans may forever look back upon with pride. In illustration, Mr. Page offers an engaging anecdote from Long's memoir of Lee.

It appears that on the afternoon of the day of the surrender at Appomattox, Meade paid a friendly visit to Lee at his headquarters. In the course of the conversation, Lee turned to Meade, who had been associated with him as his officer of engineers in the "old army," and said, pleasantly: "Meade, years are telling on you. Your hair is getting quite gray."
"Ah, General Lee," was Meade's prompt reply, "that is not the work of years. You are responsible for my gray hairs."

LETTER STUDY STIRS SCHOOLMARM'S

Arthur Holmes, Psychology Expert, Finds Sharp Criticism

School teachers the country over, particularly Chicago School teachers, are discussing a series of lectures delivered last week before the Cincinnati Teachers' Institute by Dr. Arthur Holmes of the Department of Psychology of the University of Pennsylvania. Especially did these teachers of Chicago criticize Dr. Holmes because he said on last Friday to his hearers in Cincinnati that love letters between pupils, under proper supervision, is an excellent method of teaching literature.

Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, Superintendent of the Chicago Public Schools, almost used deep words when interviewed on that subject by one of the Chicago papers.

"I do not believe that he said it," was the first thought to which Mrs. Young gave expression when the statement was brought to her attention. She added:

"I do not think he would make such a statement. Mrs. Young paused for several seconds. She took a deep breath. Then she gulped twice. At last she burst into a peal of laughter. Ha, ha of himself," she added.

The first gulp seemed to be eloquent of what Mrs. Young would have liked to say.

"Those letters would hardly be spontaneous, would they?" said Mrs. Esther Canfield, Principal of the Wrightwood Avenue School. "I should be interested to see the experiment tried in some school other than my own."

"What sort of literature did Dr. Holmes say the love letters would teach?" queried Line M. Troendle, Principal of the Diversey Boulevard School.

Haag to be first to make it a feature of his shows and to inaugurate it has secured Miss Nellie King, the premier Lady Cornetist of America today, and at both afternoon and evening performances Miss King will render her superb solos.

"THE HAIRS OF YOUR HEAD ARE NUMBERED"

There is a great deal of truth in the old saying. Roots die, vitality gives out. The hair begins to turn grey.

This is particularly unfortunate as we are all living in an age when to LOOK young means to fill the YOUNG and IMPORTANT positions. Old fogies go to the background. If you should begin to chalk down every day of your life, the exact number of hairs that turn grey, you would be surprised and soon learn that "The Grey Hairs of Premature Old Age" come on very quickly, if you neglect them.

Roosevelt Out; It's Taft or Wilson

New York Press, Republican.

Mr. Roosevelt cannot get enough votes in Republican territory to do himself any good. And if he cannot get them in Republican territory, how can anybody expect him to get them in Democratic territory? In Vermont his party is able to count only a small fraction of the whole vote cast.

No body can doubt that every Roosevelt vote in Vermont was put in the ballot box. The Roosevelt followers, enthusiastic to a degree, do not fail in any test to do all that it is in them to do. There are no more Roosevelt ballots in Vermont.

But with his collapse in Vermont, Mr. Roosevelt shows more than his own failure to poll enough Republican votes to do him any good; he shows that his third term movement makes votes for the Democratic party. The Democratic candidate for Governor did not lose votes, compared with 1910. He gained votes; he gained them not merely relatively but positively. Compared with 1908 he did the same thing.

The lesson from Vermont is that there is no possibility of the Colonel being elected President; that the most he can hope to achieve is the election of Wilson; that if Wilson is to be defeated the only chance to defeat him is with the Republican ticket.

What the Roosevelt followers now have to choose between is either the election of Taft or Wilson. Roosevelt is out. It is beyond the power of the Roosevelt followers to do anything for the Colonel. They can do something for Mr. Wilson by throwing away their votes on the Colonel. If they wish to give the Government to the Democratic party, with all that such means, the way to help is to throw away their votes to the Colonel. If they wish to keep the Government out of the hands of the Democrats they must vote the Republican ticket.

We have no doubt that, as it becomes more and more evident that Mr. Roosevelt is completely out of the race, his followers, who for the welfare of the country are anxious to keep the government out of the hands of the Democrats, will turn to the Republican party as the only possible means to do this at the ballot box.

Whether the Vermont Legislature will elect a Republican Governor is of the very smallest consequence compared with the question of how many Roosevelt followers will now leave the Colonel to keep the Government from capture by the Democrats.

TONS OF GOLD

In Coffers of Uncle Sam—
Figures of Staggering Proportions Issued By Treasury Department

Facts About the Most Prosperous County On Earth

Uncle Sam is not greatly worried over the question of where the next meal is to come from, in spite of all the storm and stress of politics and the pre-election talk of empty dinner pails, long bread lines and similar troubles and calamities. This is clearly indicated by a brief study of the Treasury figures. They show the government to be in a flourishing condition with the wolf so far removed from the door that there is little need for anxiety over how to get along through the winter, even if a billion dollar Congress has just got through and another will be there the beginning of December.

The Treasury Department has in its vaults at this time gold coin and bullion to the value that breaks all records. Not only is more gold treasure amassed in the Treasury Department than this country has ever before had, but nothing in the records of foreign nations can approach it. The total now is about double the gold coin and bullion possessed by any foreign country.

Moreover, one might go back through the financial history of the world to the beginning of history and fail to find another store of gold like this. Old Croesus himself never dreamed of anything like it.

At the end of August, this year, the total gold coin and bullion in the Treasury amounted to a little less than a billion and a quarter dollars in value. The exact amount in round numbers was $1,221,000,000. Over a billion of this is gold coin. Of this staggering amount $1,048,000,000 is held for the redemption of outstanding gold certificates. The sum of $150,000,000 is in the reserve fund and is held for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes. The enormous sum of $22,000,000 in gold coin is held in the general fund of the Treasury.

But vast as is the amount of gold coin and bullion in the Treasury, it is only a fraction of the entire wealth of money in the United States. Statistics show that on July 1st, 1912, the kinds in circulation was $3,276,786,618. This gives, according to the estimates of the Treasury, a per capita circulation of $34.26.

In other words, every man, woman and child in the country is entitled to $34.26 on this basis. Some have this and more; others do not have their quota. The Treasury estimates per capita circulation are based on a supposed population of 95,638,000 in continental United States.

Customs receipts for August and July the first two months of the present fiscal year, ran $4,000,000 each above the figures for the same two months of 1911. Ordinary internal revenue taxes were an increase of $3,000,000 for the two months' period this year over last year.

Aside from the Panama canal and the public debt the excess of ordinary disbursements over receipts was approximately $16,000,000 less than for the corresponding two months last year, largely attributed to the holding up of the appropriation bills in the closing weeks of Congress.

The public debt was diminished during August by $689,542.

During August fifteen National banks with a capital of $595,000 were authorized to begin business, making a total of 10,250 National banks organized up to last Saturday.

The United States Mint during August coined $505,000 in gold, $586,000 in silver and $226,000 in one-cent pieces.

The Helen Forsythe Missionary Society will have a meeting at the M. E. Church, South, at 2:30 p. m. Saturday.

Raising Money at Danville Conference

Mr. W. W. Ball of Maysville, treasurer of the Preachers' Aid Society, of the conference, was the only man allowed to take a collection on the conference floor. After making his annual report of the funds of the society and the encouraging increase during his term of office, he called for subscriptions for increase of endowment and for the emergency relief fund. Over $1,300 was soon raised with which other amounts recently subscribed makes something over $1,500. Most of this amount is to be added at once to the endowment fund which now approximates $25,000.

MY LADY OF DOUBT

BY RANDALL PARRISH

Author of 'Love Under Fire,' 'My Lady of the North,' etc.

Illustrations by HENRY THIEDE

COPYRIGHT, A.C. CLURG & CO., 1911

SYNOPSIS.

Major Lawrence, son of Judge Lawrence of Virginia, whose wife was a Lee, is sent on a perilous mission by Gen. Washington, just after the winter at Valley Forge. Disguised in a British uniform Lawrence arrives within the enemy's lines. The Major attends a great feast and saves the "Lady of the Blended Rose" from mob. He later meets the girl at a brilliant ball. Trouble is started over a waltz, and Lawrence is urged by his partner, Mistress Mortimer (The Lady of the Blended Rose), to make his escape. Lawrence is detected as a spy by Captain Grant of the British Army, who agrees to a duel. The duel is stopped by Grant's friends and the spy makes a dash for liberty, swimming a river following a narrow escape. The Major arrives at the shop of a blacksmith, who is friendly, and knows the Lady of the Blended Rose.

CHAPTER VIII.

Tangling Threads.

My surprise at this unexpected reference to the Lady of the Blended Rose, almost prevented utterance. What could this partisan ranger know of the girl? How could he even have identified her from my vague reference?

"Why do you say that?" I asked eagerly. "I did not mention the lady's name."

"There was no cause for you to do so," and the grim smile faded. "No one else in Philadelphia would have turned the trick so neatly; besides the fact that your opponent was Grant would have revealed the identity of the girl."

"You know them both then?"

"Fairly well; he was a boy in these parts, and I have shot his riding horse many a time. A headstrong, domineering, spoiled lad he was, and quarrelsome."

"But Mistress Mortimer," I interrupted, "is her family also from this neighborhood?"

"To the northeast of here, near Locust Grove; the properties of the two families adjoin each other, and I have heard there is distant kinship between them, although if that be true all that was good in the strain must have descended to the one branch, and all the evil to the other. Day and night could be no different. Colonel Mortimer is a genial, pleasant gentleman, an ardent friend, although we are in arms against each other. To tell the truth I half believe his heart is with the Colonies, although he casts his fortunes with the King. He even has a son in the Continental Army."

"On Lee's staff," I interrupted. "The daughter told me he was a twin brother."

"Yes, an' as great a rogue as the girl, with the same laughing blue eyes."

"And Mistress Claire," I questioned, "on which side is she?"

"Can you ask that after having met her as a Lady of the Blended Rose? Pshaw, man, I could almost give you a list of the loyalist dames who make sport for the British garrison, an' Mistress Claire is not least in rank or beauty among them. What else could you expect of a young girl when her father wears the green an' white, while her lover has made a reputation hereabout with his hiring raiders?"

"You mean Grant?"

"Certainly; they have been engaged from childhood, though God pity the poor girl if they ever marry. His work in the Jerseys has been almost as merciless as that of 'Red' Fagin, an' 't is even whispered about they ride together at times. I doubt if she knows the whole truth about him, though she can scarcely deem him an angel even at that. Surely you never supposed her on our side?"

"She helped me," I insisted, "knowing who I was, and even said she wished my cause well."

"The inconsistency of a woman; perhaps the two had some misunderstanding, an' she was glad enough to outwit the fellow."

"No, 't was not that, I am sure; I could read truth in her eyes."

"In Claire's eyes!" he laughed outright. "Oh, I know the innocent blue of them, and warn you not to trust such blindly. Other men have thought the same, an' found out they read wrongly when the end came—say! many of them. When she was but a slip of a lass I found out her eyes played merry tricks, an' yet I love her though she were my own daughter. An' she's a good girl in spite of all the mischief in her."

"And she is truly a loyalist?"

"If not, I know no better. The rebel blood is in the boy so far as I can learn, yet I will not answer for what Mistress Claire might do."

We fell silent, my memory with the girl, endeavoring to recall her exact words, the expression of her face. It was not in my heart to believe she had deceived me.

I had almost forgotten where I was, as well as the presence of my companion, when he suddenly arose to his feet, and, pushing aside the wooden window shutter, looked out. A glance of his keen eyes was sufficient.

"Get back into your box, Major," he exclaimed quickly. "Pull the papers over you!"

I was upon my feet, conscious of the distant sound of horses' hoofs.

"What is it? The enemy?"

"Rangers! fifty of them, I judge, an' they'll never pass here without rummaging around. Quick now, under cover."

"But what about yourself?"

"Don't worry about me; those fellows haven't any evidence against me—yet. They're after you."

I was through the intervening door with a bound and an instant later had burrowed under the crumpled papers. The shifting of the sun had left this corner of the repair shop in shadow, but I was scarcely outstretched in my hastily improvised hiding place, when I heard the blacksmith calmly open his outer door, where he stood smoking, clad in leathern apron, awaiting the approaching horsemen. They swept about the corner of the smithy almost at the same moment, pulling up their drowsed horses at sight of him. In the midst of the thud of hoofs, and the rattle of accoutrements, a voice spoke sharply:

"So you're here, Farrell, you old rebel hypocrite. Well, what are you hiding now?"

"I was not aware that I had anything to hide, Captain Grant," was the dignified response. "This is my shop, an' where I should be."

"Oh, hell! We all know you well enough, you old fox, and we'll catch you red-handed yet, and hang you. But we're not hunting after your kind today. Did you see anything of a fellow in scarlet jacket along here last night, or this morning?"

I failed to catch Farrell's answer, but the voice of the officer was sufficiently loud to reach me.

"A rebel spy; the sneaking rascal must have swam the Delaware. We'll look about your shop just the same before we ride on, Mason, take a half-dozen men with you, and rake the place over."

I heard the sound of their boots on the floor, and burrowed lower in my box. Two or three entered the old shop, and began to probe about among the debris. One kicked the box in which I lay, and thrust a bayonet down through the loose papers, barely missing my shoulder. With teeth clenched I remained breathless, but the fellow seemed satisfied, and moved on, after searching the dark corner beyond. At last I heard them all go out, mumbling to each other, and venturing to sit up again, and draw a fresh breath. They had left the door ajar, and I had a glimpse through the crack. Farrell was leaning carelessly in the outer doorway, smoking, his short legs wide apart, his expression one of total indifference. A big fellow stepped past him, and saluted some one just out of sight.

"Nobody in there, sir," he reported. "All right, Mason," and Grant came into view on a rangy sorrel. "Get your men back into saddle; we'll move on."

"Think he went this way?" asked the blacksmith carelessly.

"How the hell do I know!" savagely. "He must have started this way, but likely he took the north road. We'll get the chap before night, unless he runs into Delavan's fellows out yonder. See here, Farrell," holding in his horse, "we'll be back here about dark, and will want something to eat."

"You will be welcome to all you find."

"You impudent rebel, you see that you are here when we come. I know you, you night rider, and will bring you to book yet. Forward men—tro! Close up the rank there, sergeant; we'll take the road to the left."

I watched them go past, the dust-covered green uniforms slipping by the crack of the door, as the men urged their horses faster. Farrell never moved, the blue tobacco smoke curling above his head, and I stole across the littered storeroom to a cobwebbed window, from which I could watch the little column of riders go down the hill. They finally disappeared in the edge of a grove, and I turned around to find the blacksmith leaning against his anvil waiting for me.

"Genial young fellow, Grant," he said. "Always promising to hang me, but never quite ready to tackle the job. Afraid I shall have to disappoint him again tonight."

"You will not wait for him?"

"Hardly. You heard what he said about Delavan? That was the very news I wanted to learn. Now I think both those lads will meet me much sooner than they expect."

He stepped forward into the open doorway, and blew three shrill blasts on a silver whistle. The echo had scarcely died away, when, out from a thick clump of trees perhaps half a mile distant, a horse shot forth, racing toward us. As the reckless rider drew up suddenly, I saw him to be a barefooted, freckle-faced boy of perhaps sixteen, his eyes bright with excitement.

"So 't is you on duty, Ben," said Farrell quietly, glancing from the boy to his horse. "Well, you're in for a ride. Have the men at Lone Tree by sundown; all of them. See Duval first, an' tell him for me this is a big thing. Now off with you!"

The boy, grinning happily, swung his horse around, and, jabbing his sides with bare heels, rode madly away directly south across the vacant land. Within five minutes he had vanished down a sharp incline. Farrell was still staring after him, when I asked:

"What is it?"

"What is it?"

"What is it?"

"What is it?"

"What is it?"

"What is it?"

"A little bit of private war," he said grimly. "If you'll go with me tonight, Major, I'll show you some guerilla fighting. You heard what Grant said about Delavan. We've been waiting five days for him to head back toward Philadelphia. He has twenty wagons, an' a foraging party of less than fifty men somewhere out Medford way," with sweep of hand to the northeast. "If he an' Grant get together the two commands will outnumber us, but we'll have the advantage of surprise, of a swift attack in the dark. In my judgment that is what Grant was sent out for—to guard Delavan's wagons. His spy hunting was a personal affair. My advice to you, Lawrence, is to lie quiet here today, and go along with us tonight. It will be in the same direction you'll have to travel, an' you might have a fight by daylight. No objections to that, have you?"

"None whatever."

"I judged so from your face. Better get what rest you can; we will have twenty miles to ride before dark. I'll go over into the timber there an' feed the horses."

I watched him cross the open land, impressed by the man's immense shoulders and short limbs. I could scarcely analyze the influence he already exerted over me, but I felt him to be a natural leader of men, an intellectual as well as physical giant. I picked up a book lying open on the bench—it was an English translation of a famous French treatise on the Rights of Man, its paper margins covered with written comments. This blacksmith was not only a man of action, but a man of thought also. I lay down on the bench, pillow my head on one arm, thinking of him as I first saw him kneeling alone in prayer, and the simple words of his petition came back to me with new power. Then my mind drifted to the strange commingling of human elements in this adventure—to Mistress Claire, and her connection with Grant, and the intimate knowledge Farrell apparently possessed of them both. Somehow I was becoming more and more deeply involved in these lives, and I began to wonder how it was all destined to end. Was the coming night to add a new chapter? If so, would it be the last? Reviewing it all, lulled by the silence, I fell asleep.

CHAPTER IX.

With Minute Men.

I must have slept very heavily, the sleep of utter exhaustion, for I awoke with my mind clear and body rested. The door of the shop remained wide open, and Farrell sat there, his eyes upon his knees, as I moved slowly he instantly turned his face toward else.

"I began to fear I should have to arouse you, Major," he said, coming within. "You have slept soundly for six hours, an' we must be off presently. First, however, we will have a bite to eat."

He began to prepare the meal, while I bathed my face.

now am ready for any service. What has occurred since I lay down?"

"Very little; Duval stopped a moment to report, an' two of my couriers rode past this way. We are going to have a goodly sized gathering tonight, an' from all I hear will need every rifle. Grant's purpose is, as I supposed, to guard the forage train into Philadelphia. He expects to meet them somewhere between Fellowship and Mount Laurel, an' the chances are we shall have to fight both detachments. But fall to, man, an' we can discuss all this as we eat."

He talked freely enough while we remained there, but conversation veered to the book he had been reading, and I learned little of his plans, except that he relied upon surprise, and swiftness of movement to overcome the decided advantage of numbers. After we mounted and rode away, scarcely a word was exchanged between us. Just before dusk we overtook a dozen horsemen in the breaks of a creek bottom, roughly dressed fellows, heavily armed, riding in the same direction as ourselves, and, after the exchange of a word or two, the whole party of us jogged along together. Others straggled in, singly, or by small groups, as darkness closed about, until we formed quite a respectable company. It was rather a silent, weird procession, scarcely a word being spoken, and no sound heard, other than the dull reverberation of unshod hoofs on the soft turf. To me, glancing back from where I held position beside Farrell, they seemed like spectral figures, with no rattle of accoutrements, no glimmer of steel, no semblance of uniform. Yet my heart warmed to the knowledge that these were no holiday warriors, but grim fighting men. They had left their plows in the furrow to strike a blow for liberty.

It was an hour or more after dark when our compact little body of horsemen rode down a gully into a broad creek bottom, and then advanced through a fringe of trees to the edge of the stream. There was a young moon in the sky yielding a spectral light, barely making those faces nearest me visible. At the summit of the clay bank, shadowed by the forest growth encircling them, were the others who had gathered at this war rendezvous, the majority dismounted, holding their horses in readiness for action. As we rode in among them neighbors clasped hands silently, but the words exchanged were few. Farrell forced his horse through the press toward where a tall figure sat stiff in the saddle, and my own horse followed unguided.

"A goodly turn-out, Duval," he commented briefly. "What was the number before we came?"

"Forty-seven rifles," the Lieutenant's voice nasal, and high pitched. "The men from Orchard and Springdale are not in yet. How many arrived with you?"

"Twenty; ample for our purpose, even if the others fail us. This is Major Lawrence of the Maryland Line."

"Sixty-nine, all told," he announced briefly. "All right, boys, come on, and keep your powder out of the water."

It was firm bottom, but the water rose above the waist, with sufficient current so we had to back against it in mid-stream. We trailed dropping up the eastern bank, coming out upon a well-traveled road. A hundred feet beyond was the cleft through the clay, and there Farrell halted us, dividing the men into two parties. Under his orders they disappeared like magic, the silent night engulfing them completely. The three of us, Duval, Farrell, and myself, alone remained in the deserted road.

"Duval," said the blacksmith quietly, "you an' the Major feel your way along to the top, an' discover what is happening. I'll stay here, an' take care of the boys."

The road was a gradual rise, the clay packed hard under foot, but from the summit we could look away for some distance over a level country, dimly revealed under the new moon. There was nothing in sight, and no sound disturbed the solitude. We sat down on a bunch of turf, rides in hand, to wait patiently, our eyes scanning the distance.

Pleasant Quarters for French Prisoners.

A retreat rather than a prison is the new institution which has been raised at Evreux, on the road from Paris to Trouville, says a correspondent of the London Globe. It is devoid in form, much in appearance to that of a large castle, and is surrounded by a wall over 30 feet in height.

It is situated on high ground overlooking the town, and to say the least prisoners should have a very comfortable time. Each has his own cell with hammock bed washing utensils and a table for books. The cells are lighted by electricity and heated by radiators. The authorities have not forgotten the spiritual needs of their hots. Have Privilege of Creation Consolation for Women Who Do Not Enjoy All the Advantages They See Others Have.

Women are taught very wrongly about love. They are allowed to read love stories at a tender age and form a totally false notion of love.

They see themselves as charmers at a very early age. They begin trying to captivate, to charm, to ensnare the opposite sex, before they are out of the nursery. They live and die—many, many of them—without ever in the least understanding the truth about love or, in fact, about anything else.

Women are very envious by nature. There seems to be plenty of justification in this one way you look at it. Why should one woman have luxury, ease, travel, society and fine clothes and another woman have only toil and loneliness and privation?

It is a useless question. We can't change the inequalities of life, said genially. "We have a style an' our own."

"I had supposed I had witnessed all styles."

"We'll see; the difference is that every man among us has some outrage to revenge. Our quarrel is a personal one against thieves and murderers. What is the program, Farrell?"

"To intercept Delavan's raiders. They will be along the main road within the hour from all reports. He has a wagon train loaded with stuff gathered up between Medford an' Mount Holly, together with a considerable drove of cattle and some horses."

"And what force?"

"About fifty men originally, but reinforced this afternoon with as many more to help guard the train into Philadelphia."

"Mounted?"

"The reinforcements were, but the original foragers were afoot; they were Hessians; the others (Grant's company of Queen's Rangers."

"Glory be to God!" exclaimed a voice near at hand. "Did ye hear that, lads? It's Dutchmen and Tories we're against tonight. Be Gorry! I wouldn't have missed the chance of this shindy for the best farm in Camden."

There was a low growl from the cluster of men, and an ominous movement of bodies pressing closer. Duval laughed mirthlessly.

"The bloodhound takes the scent," he said grimly. "God help those poor devils when we cut the leash, Farrell. Where do you propose meeting them?"

"Across there in the bluffs," pointing, "where the road turns in between the high clay banks. We'll leave our horses here, an' cross on foot. Is that the right plan, boys?"

There was a murmur of acquiescence, a few questions, and then the silence of approval. It was evident these minute men were under small discipline, and their officers led only by force of character. Without orders the horses were led away, tied securely in the black depths of the woods, and the men came straggling back, rifles in hand, grouping themselves along the edge of the stream. There was no attempt at military formation, but Duval straightened them out so as to count the number present.

"Sixty-nine, all told," he announced briefly. "All right, boys, come on, and keep your powder out of the water."

It was firm bottom, but the water rose above the waist, with sufficient current so we had to back against it in mid-stream. ## THESE SIX LETTERS From New England Women

Prove that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Does Restore the Health of Ailing Women.

Boston, Mass.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from hemorrhages (sometimes lasting for weeks), and could get nothing to check them. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound (tablet form) on Tuesday, and the following Saturday morning the hemorrhages stopped. I have taken them regularly ever since and am steadily gaining."

"I certainly think that every one who is troubled as I was should give your Compound Tablets a faithful trial, and they will find relief."—Mrs. GEORGE JURY, 802 Fifth Street, South Boston, Mass.

Letter from Mrs. Julia King, Phoenix, R.I.

Phoenix, R.I.—"I worked steady in the mill from the time I was 15 until I had been married a year, and I think that caused my bad luck. I had nervous in my side near my left hip that went around back, and sometimes I would have to lie in bed for two or three days was not able to do my housework."

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me wonder every way. You may use my letter for the good of others. I am glad to do anything within my power to recommend your medicine." JULIA KING, Box 283, Phoenix, R.I.

Letter from Mrs. Etta Donovan, Willimantic, Conn.

Willimantic, Conn.—"For five years I suffered untold agony from troubles causing backache, irregularities, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It was impossible for me to walk up stairs without stopping on way. I was all run down in every way."

"I tried three doctors and each told me something different. I received no benefit from any of them but seemed to suffer more. The last doctor said it was no use for me to take anything as nothing would restore me health again. So I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see what it would do, and by taking seven bottles of the Compound and other treatment you advised, I am restored to my natural health."—Mrs. ETTA DONOVAN, 763 Main Street, Willimantic, Conn.

A SIXTH SENSE FOR VESSELS

Hiram Maxim Has Plan to Prevent Collisions at Sea.—Takes Lesson from the Bat

Briefly stated, he wishes to provide ships with a "sixth sense," represented by an apparatus that will send vibrations and record minutely "echoes" caused by them if they are against any hard object near ship — an iceberg, for example.

Hiram got his idea of this sixth sense from the bat, which, according to him and other scientists, possesses such a sense, and is able by means of it to find its way about in the dark with perfect ease.

The inventor explains his invention in a pamphlet just published by him in London. "The wreck of the Titanic was a severe and painful shock to us all," he writes. "I asked myself: 'Has there no possible means of avoiding such a deplorable loss of life and property?' At the end of four hours it occurred to me that ships could be provided with what might be appropriately called a sixth sense, that would detect large objects in their immediate vicinity without the aid of a searchlight."

Then Sir Hiram set to work to study the bat's peculiar possession in an endeavor to apply it to preventing marine collisions, and soon hit upon the idea which he now makes public. Before describing the new apparatus it is well to set out what he has to say about that which inspired it, the sixth sense of the bat.

"Every naturalist that has either experimented on bats or writes on the subject," he says, "seems to admit that the extraordinary appendages attached to the bat's face are organs of perception more or less allied to the sense of feeling, but not one of them, so far as I can learn, has ever suggested that these organs are for the purpose of receiving the echo from the vibrations of the wings. I think I was the first to discover this."

The inventor goes on to show that the wings of the bat are extremely sensitive and very well provided with nerves, which is also true of the various organs of the bat's face. These nerves, he maintains, are intimately connected with each other and with the brain. Thus a bat, flying about in total darkness, seems out, by means of its wings, a series of pulsations or wave-like sound waves, but too low to be considered a sound. These waves, striking against all surrounding objects, are reflected back to their source, just as sound and light are, and these reflections of the vibrations, being received by the sensitive organs on the face of the bat, enable it to judge the distance to any object by the lapse of time between the sending out and the receiving of the waves.

Coming, then, to his collision-preventer, Sir Hiram says:

"Suppose now that we construct an apparatus that will produce atmospheric vibrations of about the same frequency as those produced by the bat, but instead of using the infinitesimal amount of energy employed by the bat, we use 200 or 300-horsepower—that is, we send out waves that have an amplitude and energy at least 300,000 times as great as those sent out by the bat. These vibrations, although of great energy, will not be audible to our ears, but they will shake up and agitate light objects for a considerable distance, and will travel at least 20 miles, so that they could be received and recorded by a suitable apparatus at that distance, and would be able to travel at least five miles and send back to the ship a reflected echo that would be strong enough to be detected."

Sir Hiram points out that in providing a ship with a "sixth sense," three distinct devices must be combined: one for producing and sending out the necessary sound waves, one for receiving the reflected waves and making them audible by ringing bells and another apparatus for recording the amplitude of the waves. Here is his description of the apparatus he has invented:

"For producing the vibrations of waves I prefer to use a modified form of siren, the disk being rotated at a suitable speed by a motor of some kind, preferably an electric motor. I great amplitude and power they are able to travel over great distances, and when they come in contact with a body the waves are reflected back to the ship in the same manner that sound would be reflected back, but this echo would not be audible to the human ear."

"I therefore provide an apparatus which might be considered as an artificial ear. It is provided with a large diaphragm tightly drawn over a drum-shaped cylinder, and so arranged that the atmospheric pressure is always the same on both sides, quite irrespective of any air blast. It is therefore always able to vibrate freely in response to the waves of the echo, and its vibrations are made to open and close certain electrical circuits which ring a series of bells of various sizes. If, for example, the object is very small or at a very great distance from the ship, a very small

Instead of ringing a bell it produces a diagram of the disturbances in the air—that is, when there is no noise except that due to the action of the ship or the sea waves, a wavy line is produced, but whenever the vibrations sent out by the vibrator strike an object and return, the wavy line on the paper becomes very much increased in amplitude, so as to be easily observed, and the distance that the object is from the ship can be measured by the length of the paper strip between the giving off of the vibrations and the receiving of the echo; therefore, the distance can be determined with a considerable degree of nicety, and the size of the object may be determined by the amplitude of the waves that return.

The inventor says that the apparatus for producing the atmospheric vibrations should be placed well forward on the main deck of the ship or in any position where it can be turned about from port to starboard. It should be secured to the deck very firmly, and connected, by means of a three-inch pipe, with a high-pressure boiler. A straightaway valve should be placed in the pipe near the boiler, and some means should be found of preventing the accumulation of water in the pipe leading to the apparatus.

Except in foggy or stormy weather, the apparatus would be merely ornamental, of course, until it were used for communicating with other ships.

prefer to use a very high pressure of steam, to have all the parts large and strong, and to produce about 14 or 15 vibrations per second. These will not come within the range of the human ear, consequently they cannot be considered as sound, and as they are of bell rings, while a large object at a distance of two miles would ring a larger bell, and a very large object a still larger bell. This apparatus gives an audible notice if anything is ahead of the ship.

"The other apparatus is similar, but

But just as soon as darkness set in and the captain began to suspect that icebergs or other dangerous objects were close at hand, it would become useful. Of its operation under such circumstances Sir Hiram says: "It should be used constantly sending out the blasts in every direction. If the sea were perfectly clear, the blasts sent out would be recorded at the very instant of their production, but no echo would be returned other than that due to the waves of the sea, which would provide a zigzag line of small amplitude; but if there should happen to be an object of any considerable size at a distance no greater than two or three miles, the zigzag line on the paper would be changed, the amplitude of the waves would be greater and would be very noticeable."

"To make sure, the blasts could be repeated several times; and then, if the result should be always the same, it would indicate the presence of some object, and the length of paper between the primary blast and the echo would indicate the distance that the object was from the ship. It might be so arranged that one inch of paper represented a mile."

"The receiving instruments can be placed anywhere on the ship where they can be turned in the same direction that the siren is turned, and there may be as many of them as desirable."

Sir Hiram points out that there are very many accidents to ships caused by running ashore than by collision, and that a coast does not need to present a very bold sea front to produce a very strong "echo" on his apparatus. If a ship provided with his apparatus was approaching the coast of Ireland, he says, the echo would be sufficiently strong to show itself over a distance of at least ten miles.

THANKSGIVING VISIT TO UNCLE'S FARM

Mother, who went out to Uncle John's farm to pass Sunday before Thanksgiving day, telephoned Tuesday that she would not be home for Thanksgiving because one of the children was sick and Aunt Anna needed her.

"Why don't you run out for the day?" I asked father. "We can get on nicely here and perhaps I can invite somebody in to share our turkey."

"The difficulty is that I've already asked a guest," answered father. "Blakely is in town, and as I knew he'd be pretty lonely at a hotel, I told him that he must come up here Thursday, and now your mother's away!"

Poor father looked so dejected that I felt sorry for him in spite of the fact that he had spoiled a plan of mine for Thanksgiving day. So I assured him that I would do my best to take mother's place.

"You needn't put on any extra frills for Blakely," said father. "He's the sort of man who likes good old-fashioned home cooking."

"I smiled at this, for I knew that Mr. Blakely lives at one of those exclusive New York clubs, where bachelors become more and more pampered and fastidious. I silently determined to have a dinner that would do credit to the family."

"You know, Lucille," said Cousin Fannie, when I told her that we never like to have the edge of should begin the dinner with oyster and bouillon, "that your father's appetite taken off by anything before the turkey."

"But," I replied, "it would be impossible to begin with turkey. Mr. Blakely would think himself in the backwoods."

Cousin Fannie made no more objections to my plans, but she looked surprised when I said, having found her taking two pies out of the oven Wednesday afternoon, "Oh, we can't have pie! That's really a little too bucolic. A delicate dessert is much more appropriate after a heavy turkey dinner. I'd make that delicious cream renversée with vanilla sauce which I used to eat so often in Paris. Luckily I have a recipe for it."

As we sat down to the Thanksgiving dinner father said: "Now, Blakely, you won't find any of your fancy club dishes here. I knew you'd much prefer an old-fashioned dinner."

"Yes, indeed," agreed Mr. Blakely heartily, for of course he could say nothing else.

"What! Oysters?" exclaimed father. Then he looked at me again in surprise when Tilly brought in the soup, but I merely smiled. Then after he had carved the turkey he asked me for the cranberry sauce.

"I thought you'd like this better," I said, pointing to the pretty pink ice Tilly was bringing in sherbet cups.

"Well, I never ate Thanksgiving turkey before without cranberry sauce," he said, trying to laugh, but looking rather grumpy.

"I'm sure the ice is very refreshing," said Mr. Blakely, pleasantly, but I was surprised to see him make a wry face after tasting it.

"Lucille, it's salty!" exclaimed father.

I suppose I must have dipped into the salt jar instead of the sugar keg when I mixed it for Tilly. It's stupid to have salt and sugar on the same shelf. I should think mother would arrange the pantry better.

Mr. Blakely laughed and told a story about a man at the club who, thinking his bouillon was tea, spoiled it with sugar and cream. Cousin Fannie appeared so amused by this ancient yarn that he was encouraged to tell others of equal date. So the dinner passed off pleasantly until Tilly brought in the cream renversée. Father looked at me so reproachfully that I said, "Now, daddy dear, I made this French dessert myself, and I shall be hurt if you don't like it."

With a martyred air father took a spoonful of it and Mr. Blakely began eating his at the same instant. To my astonishment they both gasped and choked. Had not father been so dreadfully angry it would have been almost laughable to see them so red in the face and with tears in their eyes.

"Good heavens, Lucille! This is the hottest stuff I ever got into my mouth," exclaimed father, as soon as he could speak. "It seems to be made of Jamaica ginger."

"Oh, Cousin Fannie," I cried, "you must have told me the wrong bottle when I asked you where the vanilla was. Isn't that too bad?"

"Too bad that we didn't have the regulation pumpkin and mince pies that I promised Mr. Blakely," broke in father, almost savagely.

"Miss Fannie, she baked some," spoke up Tilly, who never can learn that she is not expected to join in the family conversation.

"By George, I'm glad of it," said father. "Bring them on, Tilly. Fannie, you're always on deck at the right moment. You have saved the day, my dear."

Cousin Fannie looked pleased and she grew pink when Mr. Blakely, with rather heavy-footed gallantry, asked her pointedly if she had ever read Patmore's "The Angel in the House." I should not have thought she would care for a compliment from a silly old bachelor like Mr. Blakely. He is not so interesting as I had at first thought him.

It seems to me that after all my trouble in getting up the dinner father might have shown some appreciation instead of saying, after our guest was gone: "Well, Lucille, we won't try to entertain company again when your mother's away."

Danger in Crabs.
Crabs, no matter how fresh they be, make some fellows sick nearly every time they eat them. Still they take a chance on it every once in so often just the same. Crabs must be very fine eating and have a lovely taste as they are being munched and put into the paunches of the crab-eaters. Crabs will eat a dead horse, or rats, pigs, cats or dogs decaying in the ocean. Perhaps if the crabs were penned up and fed on the choicest of foods for some days, so as to get a few of the dirty germs out of them, as well as rid them of the filth they eat, then in a somewhat cleaner condition they might not, after being eaten, turn the insides wrong side out and inside outward—both ways at the same time. Some foolish fellows feel highly insulted when told that they take a chance every time they eat crabs. Eat 'em and don't kick at the doctor bill.—Exchange.

Neatly Caught.
An angler once missed his gold cigarette-case, and being very much upset about it, but not being quite certain whether it had been lost or stolen, resolved not to mention the matter to a soul—not even to his wife. Two years had passed by when, on his happening to meet with a piscatorial acquaintance by the riverside, the man astonished him by remarking: "I say, did you find that cigarette-case you lost some time ago?" "No," replied the angler to the more astonished inquirer; "but you did!"

Preserving Their Morals.
When the fuse blew out for the fifth time in five minutes the woman who, with her four small children, occupied the seat nearest the motorman, clamored for assistance in removing her brood to a seat in the rear of the car. "You needn't go to all that trouble, madam," said an old gentleman reassuringly. "There is no danger. You are just as safe here as in any other part of the car."

"Oh, I'm not afraid," she said. "I want to get the children away some place where they can't hear the motorman."

If you have a number of keys in the stable, shed, henhouse and such buildings, that look and feel about alike, put wooden tags on them, with one notch for the stable, two notches for the henhouse, etc. You can tell at a glance, then, or by feeling them if it is dark, which key is the right one.

ANGRY FISH BITES ANGLER
Brooklyn Man, the Sufferer, Sends Head to Pasteur Institute, Fear- ing Rabies.

Whether a fish can have hydrophobia is a question that Fred Henry of Hancock street, Brooklyn, would like to have settled, and for that reason he has sent to the Pasteur Institute in New York the head of a pickerel that bit him at Swarts wood lake recently, says a Newton (N. J.) correspondent of the New York Press. Henry was fishing in a boat that was a trifle leaky and he took off his shoes and socks. His first catch was a pickerel weighing three pounds. When he yanked the fish it flopped around in the bottom of the boat in a lively fashion.

As Henry was baiting up again he felt a sharp pain in one of his feet, and, looking down, saw that the pickerel had made a jump and fastened its teeth in his toe. He tried to kick the fish away, but the pickerel held on and Henry had to use the handle of his landing net to pry open the fish's jaws before he got free of it. The toe started to swell where the teeth had punctured it, and Henry became worried. He says he thinks it possible that the pickerel may have had hydrophobia and as a precautionary measure, he sent the head to the Pasteur Institute.

Robert Browning's Will.
Diligent search is being made at Florence, Italy, for the will of Robert Browning, son of the famous poet, but so far it has not been found. The fact that there apparently is no will is causing considerable gossip, as the property, of which there is a good deal, both in Asolo and Florence, will pass to his wife, who was Miss Codrington of New York and from whom he lived apart for years, owing to incompatibility of temper.

Browning's property in Florence included Cass Gudi, where he spent his childhood days. When his mother died the property passed out of the family, and was acquired by him a few years ago.

WAR MEDALS NOT CLAIMED

Only Decoration That the British Soldiers Value Highly is the "Victoria Cross."

The fact that there are no fewer than 50,000 medals stored at Woolwich awaiting claimants causes one to wonder whether the soldier puts so high a value on medals as is usually supposed.

Nearly all of these medals are for the Boer war, and there is a special government department with a staff of clerks endeavoring to trace the owners. Besides these Boer war medals, there are 4,000 medals for the Zulu war which have never been claimed, and even to this day belated claims are still put in for medals for the Crimea and Indian mutiny.

A short time ago, for example, a veteran named James Crystal applied for and received a medal for Afghanistan, after a lapse of thirty years.

Most of the Boer war medals at Woolwich belong to irregulars, who joined on the outbreak of the war, and, after it was over, scattered all over the world. But many regulars have not troubled to claim the medal, alleging that it is too cheap, and considering that 750,000 of the medals were struck, it is certainly never likely to become a rarity.

Before the days of Waterloo very few medals were issued. The first medal ever issued was that given to the Elizabethan seamen who defeated the Armada, and the earliest military decoration was a silver badge issued by Charles I in 1643 for presentation to soldiers who had distinguished themselves in forlorn hopes.

Waterloo was the first occasion when there was a general issue of medals, and since that time, instead of issuing too few medals, England has gone, perhaps to the other extreme. Soldiers point out that the same decoration is awarded to the man who has been fighting at the front and carrying his life in his hands for months, as to the man in a regiment which has never stirred from the base of operations or so much as seen the enemy.

Every effort is made by the authorities to see that medals reach their owners, and if the owner of a medal happens to be dead, the medal is forwarded to his next of kin. Yet there are still large numbers unclaimed, and according to the regulations now in force, at the end of ten years' time the medals will be broken up and the silver debited to the mint.

The Victoria Cross, of course, is a decoration of quite another character, and a soldier would as soon think of parting with his life as with his Victor Cross. But this is far from being the case with other medals, and Rudyard Kipling tells how he has seen soldiers wager their Indian general service medal on the toss for the price of a pot of beer.—Pearson's Weekly.

Parthenon in Danger of Collapse.

A shock will be given to lovers of antiquity by the suggestion made in the Revue des Beaux Arts that the Parthenon is in serious danger of collapse. Within the last twenty years the columns seem to have lost their rigidity, and unless the work of strengthening the foundations is taken in hand disaster may follow. The cause of the threatened collapse is the removal by archaeologists of sculptured ruins of an earlier temple on the Acropolis which served as foundations for the Parthenon, and which have been taken to various museums for display and preservation. No effective precautions were taken to replace these relics by fresh masonry. Modern Greece has no money to spare for the necessary work of restoration, but it should not be difficult for those countries which have benefited from the spoliation of the treasures of Athens to raise funds to prevent the destruction of one of the wonders of the world.—Westminster Gazette.

Possibly they exist, but they do not exist openly, any more than the descendants of the Moorish invaders practice their Moslem rites.
